               THE CLERK: Item 6, CV 15-8921-SVW, Securities and
 5
     Exchange Commission versus Jammin Java Corporation, et al.
 6
               Counsel, please state your appearance.
 7
              MR. LEIMAN: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Tim Leiman 8 for the Securities and Exchange Commission.
 9
              MS. DAYTON: Good afternoon, Your Honor. Peggy 10
     Dayton on behalf of the defendant, Wayne Weaver.
11
               THE COURT: Okay. And the parties have given the 12 court their positions on this matter.
               Is there something that you want to emphasize that 13 14 hasn't already been emphasized?
15
              MR. LEIMAN: Not for -- 16
               THE COURT: I understand the positions; I disagree 17 with the defendant's interpretation of the Kodesh[sic] case, 18
     but -- all right. Then I'll just take the matter -- 19
              MS. DAYTON: Your Honor?
20
               THE COURT: Yes.
21
              MS. DAYTON: The defense would like to be heard to 22 respond to the SEC's arguments in its reply, particularly 23 regarding the Kokesh case.
24
               THE COURT: Okay. Kokesh. I think I said "Kodesh." 25 Kokesh.
```

```
1
               MS. DAYTON: Your Honor, the Kokesh case holds that 2
     SEC disgorgement is a penalty, and a court cannot issue a 3 penalty pursuant to its inherent equitable power.
 4
               THE COURT: I thought the case was more about statute 5 of limitations.
               MS. DAYTON: No, Your Honor, the SEC seeks to limit
 6 7 the -- 8
               THE COURT: But the language that you're taking from the case I thought was clear from the opinion that that wasn't 9 10 the interpretation. In other words, the court had a statute of limitations issue before it, and it didn't want the case to be 11 12 interpreted I think as you are now.
13
               MS. DAYTON: Respectfully, Your Honor, we disagree.
14
     If you look at the analysis of the Kokesh opinion, the court 15 sets out the framework for what constitutes a penalty; and that 16 framework about what constitutes a penalty is not limited to 17 the context of 2462's statute of limitations. For instance, when the court describes the principals that would lead you to 18 19 conclude that something is a penalty, it refers to three cases.
20
     Two of those cases setting out general principles regarding 21 what constitutes a penalty have no application to the statute 22 of limitations context; they're broader cases describing 23 broader legal principles about what does and does not 24 constitute a penalty. Although the court notes that it is 25 making this assessment in the context of this statute of
```

limitations, were the court to make this assessment with regard 1 to the ability to exercise inherent equitable authority, the 3 result would be the same. The rationale that previously 4 permitted courts to order SEC disgorgement pursuant to the 5 inherent equitable power, with that disgorgement was remedial 6 relief that restored the status quo. Kokesh directly overruled 7 that finding by holding that disgorgement is not merely 8 remedial relief that restores the status quo, it goes further, 9 and it's punitive; and, therefore, the analysis can't be 10 cabined to the statute of limitations context because the 11 rationale that leads the court to the conclusion applies across 12 the board, and it certainly applies to the court's equitable 13 powers.
14
               THE COURT: Thank you.
15
               Do you have something to add to your written 16 analysis?
17
               MR. LEIMAN: Yes, Your Honor.
18
               The Supreme Court specifically stated that parties 19 should not read into its opinion the way the defendants do now.
20
     In footnote three it said, "Nothing in this opinion should be 21 interpreted as an opinion on whether the court possessed the 22 authority to order disgorgement" and specifically limited its 23 opinion to the statute of limitations context. It provided the road map.
```

And what the defendants asked the court to do is to 25

1 be the first in the entire country to interpret it as overruling implicitly Ninth Circuit precedent and the precedent 3 throughout country, and the opinion doesn't support that. This is still an emerging opinion, but so far all of 4 5 the courts that have construed Kokesh have refused to extend 6 it. For example, the Second Circuit in SEC versus Metter 7 recently affirmed a disgorgement remedy even though it held its 8 opinion until after Kokesh came down and even though it assumed 9 that Kokesh meant that this was a penalty in the context of an 10 excessive fines claim. Other courts have also construed Kokesh 11 as being limited to the statute of limitations context. 12 cited in our brief SEC versus Brooks which decided that 13 disgorgement was remedial outside of the statute of limitations 14 context even though Kokesh said it was penal within the statute 15 of limitations context. 16 The only cases that are cited by the defendants 17 express the question as to what the future holds, but so far 18 there's nothing from either the Ninth Circuit, Ninth Circuit en 19 banc, or the Supreme Court that would overrule existing 20 precedent, including Platforms Wireless. 21 The remedy is equitable, it's existed in this circuit 22 for 30 years, and we believe the court has broad equitable 23 authority --24 THE COURT: All right. I'll take the matter under submission.

25

1
               MS. DAYTON: Your Honor?
               THE COURT: Yes.
 3
               MS. DAYTON: May I briefly respond?
 4
               THE COURT:
                           Yes.
 5
               MS. DAYTON: With regard to footnote three, we 6 believe that the SEC is misconstruing footnote three. As 7 counsel stated, footnote three says, "Nothing in this opinion 8 should be interpreted as an opinion on whether courts possess 9 authority to order disgorgement in SEC enforcement 10 proceedings."
11
               What we believe the Supreme Court is doing there is 12 signaling that it understands that its holdings is undermining, 13 basically completely undercutting court's ability to award 14 disgorgement pursuant to their equitable power, but by defining 15 a statute of limitations, the opinion could be interpreted as 16 an implied endorsement that this remedy continues to be viable; 17 and that's the result that the court is trying to avoid. It's 18 trying to avoid the opinion being construed as an endorsement 19 that SEC disgorgement survives the opinion because it doesn't.
20
               With respect to the cases that counsel points to in 21 their papers, none of that authority addresses the question 22 before this court, which is whether SEC disgorgement can be 23 awarded pursuant to the court's inherent equitable powers after 24
              In the Brooks case, in particular, although it says Kokesh.
25 that the holding of Kokesh does not apply, the question presented there was whether SEC disgorgement is remedial or penal for the purpose of survivability claims; and what's relevant here is that whether an action is remedial or penal for survivability purposes is a broader question than whether it is remedial or penal for purposes of the court's equitable powers. Notably in the Brooks opinion, the court explains that civil sanctions qualify as remedial even when they constitute penalties or have punitive functions so long as they have a remedial purpose. By contrast, the court cannot award civil sanctions that constitute penalties pursuant to its equitable powers. So the Brooks case is not persuasive on the question before this court, which is construing how Kokesh impacts a court's equity power to order a penalty.

          And then with regard to Ninth Circuit precedents, this court does not need to overrule Ninth Circuit precedents to decline to award disgorgement here. The court has always had discretion. There is no Ninth Circuit case that commands that this court order disgorgement in this matter; there is no necessary overruling of any Ninth Circuit case for the court to decline to do so here.
          THE COURT: All right. Thank you. That will stand submitted.
